5. The workshop objectives were designed to help students develop an entrepreneurial mindset. That is, how to identify and evaluate new opportunities, be creative, create value, tell what makes an idea a good idea, sell your ideas to others, manage personal finances, and finally, to give students an opportunity to network with business leaders. Objectives were crafted to give students the tools they would need to apply their degree to the needs of the current workforce. Were these objectives clear? In other words, did you understand what the workshop would be about?

1	I did it and I thought it was really good. I got to get a reduced price, which is why I was able to do ti, but I thought it was really worth the time, effort, and commitment.	Mar 8, 2012 6:57 PM
2	I would be more likely to participate in a workshop of this kind later in my school career. As a freshman, I feel like it is too much new information that I won't use for a while. I would be more inspired as a junior or senior.	Mar 7, 2012 3:58 PM
3	Additional Winterim workshops could be really cool. So far, we have entrepreneurship and an occasional WFR certification available. Could we add workshops on other applied skills? Maybe Cob construction or permaculture, or field workshops in biology or geology, or short, intensive art classes for those of us who don't have much time to take art during the rest of the year. This concept has a lot of potential: I would love to see it opened up to a broader range of topics and activities. (Maybe an eventual J-term!)	Mar 7, 2012 9:15 AM
4	LC needs something fresh and relevant like this. In honesty though, I think I would be too intimidated to do something like this. Sounds like a great opportunity nonetheless. Thanks for soliciting our opinion!	Mar 7, 2012 2:56 AM
5	It might be good to extend publicity of the workshop, so more people know about it.	Mar 6, 2012 11:25 PM

7	I think a week-long workshop on many different topics that explore practical applications of the liberal arts education would be very interesting. Receiving credit for attending is not necessary, but the costs need to be significantly reduced in order for my incentive to attend to increase.	Mar 6, 2012 8:20 PM
8	I think this is a great idea, and the timing is good because you can come back a little early in order to take the workshop. I thought seriously about taking it, but financial worries were stressful enough that I chose not to.	Mar 6, 2012 2:59 PM
9	If you could make it valuable i would participate. Making it about math, biology, chemistry, or physics	Mar 6, 2012 12:41 PM
10	Besides being unclear about the purposes of the event, I suppose my reasons for not attending included poor publications and not knowing whether or not it would be worth my time.	Mar 6, 2012 12:38 PM
11	Do not charge a fee for it. Very few people would likely show up.	Mar 6, 2012 12:32 PM
12	I enjoy the idea of creative courses taking place over different time spans than our typical courses. This sounds cool.	Mar 6, 2012 12:21 PM

35	I like the idea of entrepreneurship courses, but am wary of a major designed for entrepreneurship/business. Perhaps something like the Gender Studieswhere isn't a department and minorcould occur, instead.	Mar 5, 2012 2:43 PM
36	Credit is a must for a course taken during Winter Break. It is ridiculous to think that students will pay money and time and effort to take a course that they will get no credit for.	Mar 5, 2012 2:41 PM
37	Make it a real semester long course. A week is too short of a time and during winter break or any break is a very inaccessible time slot.	Mar 5, 2012 2:34 PM
38	Giving even just one credit would be a large incentive. Also if it was during Spring break or right after finals before summer break would be good.	Mar 5, 2012 2:21 PM
39	Place the event in it's own email. If it is jumbled in an e-mail with lots of other events I am more likely to glance over it and be overwhelmed with words and events resulting in my forgetting about this event. Possible drop mini fliers in mail box	Mar 5, 2012 2:07 PM

43	Though I don't feel that this year's workshop was applicable to me, I do see its value as a pursuit. Given our school's lack of a business degree, I think that the entrepreneurship workshop would be a very useful experience for people interested in pursuing something along those lines following graduation. Though it has merit on its own, I do think that making the workshop have a "for credit" option would be more fair to students.	Mar 5, 2012 12:53 PM
